

The three questions.

1. If you had to cut $100 from this month's spending TODAY — not next month, today — what would you cut? Write it down. Notice how long it took you to name it.
2. Looking at the last 30 days of transactions: which three charges made you genuinely feel happy about the money spent? Circle them.
3. Which three charges made you sigh, or close the app quickly? Those are the leaks. Circle them too. Those are the quiet ones.

Leaks — list everything.

No shame. Just numbers.

Buckets.

Three buckets only. Everything must fit.

BUCKET 1 • Must be paid Rent/mortgage, food, utilities, transport to work, minimum debt.

BUCKET 2 • The future Savings, debt above minimum, investments, buffer build.

BUCKET 3 • Actually living Everything else — the fun, the unplanned, the you.

The first $40.

Look at your Leaks column again.

Find one thing you are paying for that, if it disappeared today, you would not actually miss.

Subscriptions you forgot. Apps you opened twice. Memberships from 2024.

That number is almost certainly at least $40. Often $80. Sometimes much more.

Cancel it. Right now. Before you finish this page.

Set a calendar reminder to come back next month and run this audit again.

Want the full system?

This audit is chapter one.

The Paycheck-to-Paycheck Escape Plan walks you through the full four-word system — Leaks, Buckets, Buffer, Drill — in order, in plain English.

It is 96 pages. It takes a weekend. It is built for people who earn decent money and still run out before the month ends.

Available in two editions:

- Global edition — $14 USD (PDF + EPUB, worldwide)
- Nigerian edition — ₦5,500 (written in Naira, Nigerian examples)

Both come with lifetime updates and a 30-day no-questions refund.
